Growing up in a small town in Oklahoma, I learned the importance of building relationships with others and learning from their experiences. Going into college, I was worried I would not find meaningful connections that would spur me on to reaching my full potential. However, my perspective quickly shifted upon my arrival. My professors took an interest in me. They got to know me and called out potential in me. Additionally, the on campus organizations I have been fortunate enough to be part of have cultivated leadership skills in me and have aided me in my future career path. These experiences have allowed me to serve the Tahlequah community, build relationships with my peers and pursue greater academic heights. I am so thankful for the lasting impact that NSU and PLC have had on my life.
